OBTOBER.

Now Nature, like the queen of Eastern story, Arrays berself in royal robes to die, The forest now puts on its brightest glory Though wild winds sigh.

The mournful breeze sweeps through the branches sighing:
The tree tops murmur in a cadence deep,
as if some grand heroic song undying Lay there asleep.

As now it whispers softly as a lover, So now it rages in its fiercest might; Till earth can scarce be seen beneath the Of leaflets bright.

Bet yet, though Nature never looks so royal, Alas! as when her time has come to die; And winter, like a treach rous friend disloyal Creeps cowering nigh.

Yet, o'er the heart there comes a sense of As at the death of some dear one below; When all we have, when all we hope of glad-Seems lost in woe.

The fload wind tells us "Nothing lasts for The dying forest whispers "nothing long;" The breeze among the brauches murmurs

Its saddest song.

Preservation of Meat.

A new process for the preservation of meat by means of a solution of bisulphite of calcium has been lately patented in England by Messrs. Medlock and Baily. Chemists say this preservative is a very powerful one, and that, although its application to the purpose of preserving food may be new, the antiseptic qualities of sulphite of calcium have long been recogents of McDougall's powder. In the late patent, however, the more soluble between the more soluble between the Supreme Court or Department in Washington City. nized. It is one of the chief ingredibisulphite is employed. This compound is said to posses general advantages over other sulphites. It is easily obtained free from sulphate, and DR. KNAPP has returned home, and is prevantages over other sulphites. It is if any sulphate should be afterwards formed by oxidation, no unpleasant the ruins of the Bowman House. septediff taste would be noticed by the consumer. These points have probably operated against the extended use of favor. The results obtained so far are remarkably good.

It is stated that beef, mutton, lobsters, etc., treated by this process, kept good for twelve days, with the temperature varying between 80 o and and 110°, the original odor and flavor remaining unimpaired at the end of that time. In twenty-six hours portions of the same animal matter, unprepared, were absolutely putrid. ood judges think the process is likely to prove valuable, both to the public and the patentees.
